On January 15, while the oil tanker Mare Doricum was unloading crude oil at the Pampilla Refinery north of Lima, Peru, the ship spilled oil into the sea. Initial reports blamed the incident on "abnormal" weather, but investigations are ongoing, and the refinery is being "sanctioned" by the government. An environmental emergency has been declared, and beaches have been closed, and hundreds of cleanup workers are working to contain the spill. Spanish energy firm Repsol.
